

Contents

From the editorial office – Iwona Arabas	7
Ludwik Frey – Plants, thieves, treasures – magical plants in practice	9
Justyna Makowska-Wąs, Irma Podolak – Blue color and medicinal plants – a few words about indigo and more	35
Katarzyna Popiołek-Barczyk – The Feverfew – an ancient remedy for modern diseases	73
Jolanta Marciniuk, Katarzyna Kowalcze – Dandelion (Taraxacum) in European and Asian phytotherapy	89
Jacek Drobnik – The importance of Linnaeus’ taxonomy for the progress of pharmaceutical science in the 18th century . . .	105
Danuta Penkala-Gawęcka – Syrian rue (Peganum harmala L.) in Central Asian traditions and its popularity in the time of the COVID-19 pandemic: perspective of medical anthropology	135
Elżbieta Szot-Radziszewska – Trees in the folk image of the world. Contribution to the study of folk beliefs about trees, their use in magic and healing	165
Lidia Maria Czyż – Wild plants used to cure common illnesses by Lasowians (based on research by Franciszek Kotula)	187
Zbigniew Libera – Ethnobotany, ethnomedicine and ethnography	205
Norbert Mojżyn – Utility and symbolic meaning of medicinal plants on the Plan of the Abbey of Saint Gall (beginning of the 9th century)	221

Joanna Grześkowiak, Anna Maria Brandys – White mulberry (Morus alba L.) in scientific and cultural terms. From silk to paper	243
Robert Gruszecki, Magdalena Walasek-Janusz – The use of white cabbage in Polish folk medicine	267
Bożena Popiołek – Herbal medicines in noble purchase registers, prescriptions and in the medical handbooks in the 18th century	285
Joanna Partyka – Is folk herbalism truly folk? Exploring 19th- and 20th-century debates on the roots of phytotherapy	313
Iwona Arabas – Sources of knowledge for women taking care of the household medicine cabinets at the manors of Polish nobility: Slavic or Mediterranean traditions?	321
Piotr Daszkiewicz – The healing plants of the Polish-Lituanian Commonwealth in the works of Jean-Emmanuel Gilibert (1741–1814) – a few reflections on phytotherapy in Exercitia Phytologica	335
Małgorzata Biniecka, Małgorzata Wrześniak – Evolution of the concept of quality and methods of obtaining essential oils; the importance in the history of medical science of selected essential oils from the Mediterranean	343
Piotr Wolski – The oldest preserved botanico-medical lexicon in the Polish lands. A report from editorial and philological works. Editorial questions and scientific problems	361
Our authors	381
Information for authors	391
Subscription	394