

Alina Villalva earned her PhD in Linguistics from the University of Lisbon (Portugal), with a dissertation titled Estruturas Morfológicas. Unidades e Hierarquias nas Palavras do Português. She is a researcher specializing in Theoretical and Experimental Morphology, focusing on morphological structures, inflection, and word formation, as well as Lexical Studies, including lexical theory, historical lexicology, and lexical processing. In 2019, she founded The Word Lab, a virtual platform aimed at fostering collaboration among researchers in word processing studies. Since 1984, she has been a professor at the Faculty of Letters, University of Lisbon (FLUL), closely affiliated with the Department of General and Romance Linguistics. Additionally, she has been a researcher at the Center of Linguistics at the University of Lisbon (CLUL) since 2008, where she is part of the Psycholinguistics Laboratory team.

Ana Belén Cao Míguez is an assistant lecturer at the Department of Letters of the University of Beira Interior (Covilhã, Portugal), where she is currently coordinating the master's degree in Portuguese and Spanish Languages Teaching. She holds a PhD in Comparative Literature Studies at the Nova University of Lisbon, Portugal, a BA degree in Hispanic Philology from the University of Salamanca, Spain, and a BA degree in Portuguese Philology from the University of Santiago de Compostela, Spain. Her main areas of interest as a scholar are Comparative Literature, History of Translation, and Iberian Studies.

Ana Paula Banza is an associate professor with aggregation at the University of Évora (Portugal), where she is responsible for several disciplines in Portuguese Linguistics and Textual Criticism and currently holds the position of director of the MA course in Linguistics. She develops research in the areas of Philology, Textual Criticism, Digital Philology and Language Variation and Change, focusing her interests on the study and edition of ancient texts and in the study of phenomena of variation and change in the Portuguese language. Her most recent publications include titles such as: Realization of liquid consonants in an implosive position in barranquenho (2024); One language, many voices: towards a pluricentric language policy of Portuguese (2023); The dematerialized text: exploring the limits of digital philology (2023); On the use of written text in historical linguistics: ancient myths and modern practices (2020).

Barbara Hlibowicka-Węglarz is a professor at Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, head of the Luís Lindley Cintra Department of Portuguese Studies, director of the Portuguese Language Centre/Camões, and Honorary Consul of Brazil in Lublin, Poland. She is a specialist in Romance Linguistics, mainly Portuguese, and author of about 100 scientific papers published in Poland and abroad (Portugal, Brazil, Germany, Czech Republic, Bulgaria, China). Her research interests focus on semantic-syntactic models of natural languages, means of expressing categories of tense and aspect in Portuguese, the presence of Portuguese in the world, and the structure and occurrence of Portuguese-based Creole languages.

Edyta Jablonka is an associate professor of Linguistics at the Faculty of Philology at the Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, Poland. She works in the Department of Linguistics and Literature. Her current research is focused mainly on borrowings in Portuguese and on the History of the Portuguese language. She is the author of the monograph Introdução das unidades lexicais estrangeiras no português atual (estudo baseado em blogues femininos portugueses e brasileiros) (2016), as well as other publications on borrowings and neologisms in Portuguese, the system of Portuguese tenses, and on Portuguese vocabulary related to culinary arts.

Esperança Carneira is an associate professor of Linguistics at the Faculty of Letters of the University of Lisbon (FLUL) and a researcher at CLUL – Center of Linguistics at the University of Lisbon, Portugal. She holds a BA's in Modern Languages and Literatures, a MA in Portuguese Linguistics, and a PhD in Historical Linguistics from the University of Lisbon. She is specialised in Historical Linguistics; her main research interests also include Etymology, Lexicography, Linguistic Contacts, Onomastics, Textual Criticism, Philology and Digital Humanities. She has authored, co-authored and edited several books and papers, namely: Entre o Português Antigo e o Português Clássico (2005), O Essencial sobre a história do Português (2006), Norma e Variação (2007), Colour and Colour Naming: Crosslinguistic Approaches (2016), Breve storia della lingua portoghese (2019), Gramática histórica do Português Europeu (2021).

Helena Freire Cameron is a coordinating professor at the Polytechnic University of Portalegre, Portugal, and a researcher at CIDEHUS-University of Évora, Portugal. Her research focuses on Digital Humanities, specifically on the study and computational processing of Portuguese mid-18th-century historical texts, with a special emphasis on spelling variation and NE annotation. She holds a PhD in Linguistics from the University of Aveiro, Portugal, and a Post-Doc in Digital Humanities and NLP from the University of Évora. She has worked on various projects: in machine translation (EUOTRA-PT, ILTEC), in corpus linguistics (CRPC, CLUL), in electronic dictionaries (DIGRAMA, LABEL-IST / University of Lisbon), and in 17th-century Portuguese bilingual dictionaries (Corpus Lexicográfico do Português, University of Aveiro). She has various national and international publications.

Ieda Maria Alves holds a degree in Letters from the Catholic University of Santos, Brazil, a Master's degree in Lettres Modernes from the Académie de Lettres de Besançon, France, and a PhD in Linguistics from the Université Paris 3 – Sorbonne Nouvelle, France. She has earned a Habilitation (Livre-docência) from the University of São Paulo, Brazil. She has completed several postdoctoral research stays at renowned French institutions, including Université Paris 3, Université Paris 7 – Denis Diderot, Université Laval and Institut de la Langue Française. Currently, she is a full professor at the Faculty of Philosophy, Languages, Literature and Human Sciences of the University of São Paulo (USP), where she teaches both undergraduate and graduate courses. She has served in leadership roles, including President of the Executive Committee of the Ibero-American Terminology Network and Chair of the Lexicology, Lexicography, and Terminology Working Group at ANPOLL. Her research focuses on Neology, Lexicology, Morphology, Terminology and Lexicography.

Ignacio Vázquez Díéguez is an associate professor at the Department of Letters of the University of Beira Interior (Covilhã, Portugal), where he is currently coordinating the BA's degree in Portuguese and Spanish Studies. He holds a PhD in Hispanic Philology at the University of Barcelona (Spain), a BA degree in Hispanic Philology, and a BA degree in Portuguese Philology, both from the University of Barcelona. His main areas of interest as a scholar are Comparative Grammar, Lexicography and Diachronic Studies of Romance languages.

Joana Serafim is graduated in Classical Languages and Literatures from the Faculty of Letters of the University of Lisbon and completed a PhD in Literature at the University of Aveiro, Portugal. She has taught at various higher education institutions and is currently professor of Portuguese Language and Literature in Portuguese at the University of Zürich, Switzerland. Additionally, she is head of the Carlos de Oliveira Chair of the Camões Institute. Joana Serafim is an integrated researcher of the Philology group at CLUL (Center of Linguistics at the University of Lisbon) and her main research area concerns textual criticism, particularly Latin and Portuguese medieval texts. She is co-PI in the project Portuguese municipal charters in the Middle Ages: an historical and linguistic approach in the digital era, funded by the Fundação para a Ciência e a Tecnologia (PTDC/HAR-HIS/5065/2020).

Joanna Drzazgowska is an assistant professor at the University of Gdańsk, Poland (Institute of Romance Philology, Department of Iberian Studies); Iberian Studies at the University of Warsaw graduate, PhD in Human Sciences (Romance Linguistics). Her main research areas are: tense and aspect, verbal periphrasis in the Portuguese language, forms of address in European Portuguese.

João Batista Cardoso holds degrees in Pedagogy and Letters (both from University of Brasília, Brazil) and a Bachelor's in Theology (Faculdade Teológica Sul Americana in partnership with State University of Londrina, Brazil). He earned a Master's in Literary Theory and a PhD in Brazilian Literature (both from University of Brasília), followed by postdoctoral studies at Federal University of Minas Gerais (Brazil) and University of Brasília. Currently a full professor at the Federal University of Catalão (Brazil), he is involved in both undergraduate and graduate teaching and supervision. He is also a research collaborator at the Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, Poland. With over twenty published books and a similar number of scientific articles, including two novels, his academic work spans Brazilian and Portuguese Literature, Literary Theory, Scientific Methodology and Academic Writing. He is a member of several research groups, including Studies in Contemporary Brazilian Literature, Education and Reading, and Jewish Studies.

João Paulo Silvestre holds a degree in Language Teaching (Portuguese, Latin, and Greek) from the University of Aveiro, Portugal, where he also earned his PhD in Linguistics. His doctoral research focused on early modern Portuguese Lexicography, with a particular emphasis on cross-linguistic contact during the 18th century. He later pursued postdoctoral research on the history of Portuguese Linguistics and taught courses in Lexicology, Morphology, and Lexicography at the University of Lisbon. Currently, he is an associate professor at the University of Aveiro, where he coordinates the teaching of Portuguese as a foreign language and the Doctorate in Language Sciences. His research interests include Lexicology, Lexicography, the History of the Portuguese Language, Historical Linguistics and Linguistic Historiography.

Justyna Wiśniewska is an assistant professor in the Department of Portuguese Studies at the Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, Poland. She holds a PhD in Linguistics by the Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin. She teaches, among others, Portuguese Grammar and Morphology, Portuguese as a Second Language and Linguistics. Her main research areas include Pragmatics and Second Language Acquisition. She co-authored the Polish-Portuguese Thematic Dictionary (2015).

Laura do Carmo is a researcher at the Fundação Casa de Rui Barbosa, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. She holds a PhD in linguistics from the Rio de Janeiro State University, Brazil. She is specialised in Metalexigraphy and Philology and she develops studies on the Brazilian lexicon in Portuguese language dictionaries, coordinates the editing of texts by jurist Rui Barbosa and has dedicated herself to developing a collection of grammars and dictionaries in partnership with the National Library in Rio de Janeiro. She is one of the organizers of the publications História Social da Língua Nacional (Social History of the National Language).

Mário Eduardo Viaro is a professor in Portuguese Philology and Linguistics at the Faculty of Philosophy, Languages, Literature and Human Sciences of the University of São Paulo (USP), Brazil. He has specialized in institutions such as the Institut für Deutsche Sprache (Mannheim-DAAD, Germany), Universität Heidelberg, Lia Rumantscha / Institut da Dicziunari Rumantsch Grischun (Switzerland), and completed his post-doctorate at the University of Coimbra (Portugal). He is the author of Etimologia and Manual de Etimologia do Português and the editor of Morfologia Histórica. A level 1D researcher at CNPq, he also contributes to the Dictionnaire Étymologique Roman (DÉRom – Nancy, France). His research focuses on Etymology, History of the Portuguese Language, Romance Philology and Historical Morphology. He founded the Center of Research on Etymology and History of the Portuguese Language (NEHiLP-USP), serves as an official Romanian translator in São Paulo, and is a member of the Brazilian Academy of Philology (ABRAFIL).

Natalia Czopek is an assistant professor at the Department of Portuguese Studies (Institute of Romance Studies, Jagiellonian University of Krakow, Poland). Her areas of research are the Morphology and Syntax of Spanish and Portuguese, Portuguese-based Creole Languages and Teaching Portuguese as a Third Language. Her didactic activity covers the teaching of Portuguese and Spanish languages, Portuguese Linguistics (Morphology, Syntax, Sociolinguistics, Introduction to Linguistics) and supervision of master's theses. In 2016/2017 she conducted sociolinguistic research on the situation of the Portuguese language on the island of São Vicente, in Cape Verde.

Przemysław Dębowski is an associate professor at the Department of Portuguese Studies of the Jagiellonian University of Krakow, Poland, and the head of the Vergílio Ferreira Chair of the Camões Institute. His field of research is the Historical Linguistics of Romance languages, especially the Lexicology and Morphology of Portuguese, French and Romanian, as well as Portuguese Lexicography. He participated in several national and international projects, such as Words of French Origin in Contemporary Polish, PAS Great Dictionary of Polish (WSJP PAN), Dictionnaire Étymologique Roman (DÉRom), Atlas Linguarum Europae (ALE) and Slavic Language Atlas (OLA).